Here is a brief account of how Hobble Creek received its name from the journals of Oliver B. Huntington:

"About the first of Feb. I [1849] I started on a trading expedition to the Severe river Valley 150 miles south [my brother] Dimick fitted me out with horse, to ride ... An old Mountaineer by the name of Barney Ward and a man by the name of Joseph Mathews and I made up the company 5 or 6 miles from [Provo River], south, we came to a small creek which had no name until we stayed there overnight and I lost a pair of iron hobbles used for fastenin the forefeet of horses together. We called it hobble creek - and it afterwards went by that name." (SIC)1
